INTRODUCTION

Spices are various types of aromatic plants that produce a distinctive smell and special taste. The use of spices in everyday life, among others, for cooking, medicine, beauty, such as skin care, medicine for stomach aches and fever, and even to increase sexual arousal.

The volume or quantity of spices used for daily life may be small, but what determines the ingredients of the crumb are the aroma, taste, and irreplaceable effects or properties. And, although attached to a traditional image, in fact spices are an indispensable industrial raw material.

Indonesian spices are excellent because of their high export value, both in local and international markets.

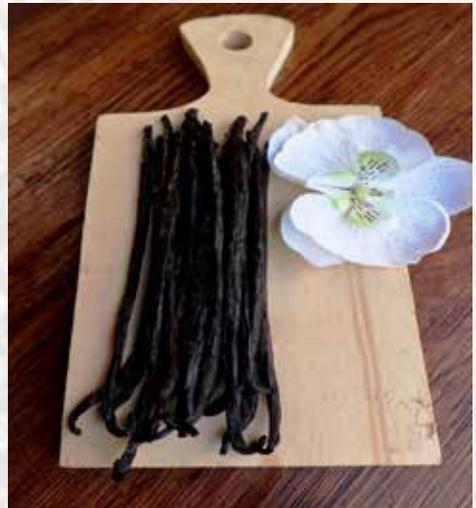

The people of the archipelago recognize, cultivate and utilize spices for various purposes, for beauty, health, and for the purposes of religious rituals. The archipelago is spices, the land of spices, meaning that Indonesia is a spice producing country, and this has been famous for a long time. The opportunity to export Indonesian spices to the international market is very potential
