What is the difference between white labelling and private labelling?

We get asked this a lot, and for a good reason too! as one will be more suited for one business, but another may be more beneficial for another business. Let's delve into what they mean.

What is Private Labelling?

A Private Label Product is usually made by a manufacturer solely for one Brand. So, if you wanted Private Labelling, you would be the only business who can sell that product (Bath Bomb)

So why would I want to do Private Labelling?

This route is completely bespoke, and no one would have your product.

What is White Labelling?

A white Label Product is an item made for rebranding. This means you can buy the base product (Catalogue Bath Bomb for example) and label it the way you want. This is usually less expensive than private labelling because you are putting your branding on an already made product.

What Should I Choose?

Good question! It depends on your goals. If you want a quick turnaround time, on products that have already been tested and approved we would suggest go for white labelling, in most cases it is also the less expensive route to take. All this would require is to choose the product you want and brand it.

What is the difference between white labelling and private labelling?

Low Research and Development cost

We will go above and beyond sourcing the best materials and making sure all your needs and requirements are met – 4 Samples will be sent for you to try even after any additional change.

Fast turnaround time

We produce thousands of Bath Bombs every month. Clear pricing structure, nothing worse than hidden fees! All of our catalogue prices are clear to see, for Bespoke solutions we will draw up a supply agreement clearly stating pricing, delivery, damages, resolutions etc so that you have a clear understanding.

Problem? 24/7 Contact

Just Email, Text or Call us – we will get back to you .

Product issues or damaged goods

Unfortunately, damaged goods are part of doing business these days. This isn't your fault that the delivery driver wanted to see how gravity works repeatedly. Simply send us photographic proof and we will replace damaged items.
