The family of Hasan Mushaima, Haqq movement's General-Secretary, said that it's been more than 100 days since their last visit following the February attack of security forces on Jau inmates.

The family explained that Mushaima, sentenced to life imprisonment, refused to come out for visits because of the humiliation they're subjected to by security forces before every visit, as forces deliberately humiliate and insult the Bahrain 13 group of leaders.

The family added that the calls they receive from Mushaima are usually wired. The authorities have ended the calls more than once. On 3 June, Mushaima's family received a call from him in which he informed them that they are prevented from going to the hospital. When asked about his cancer checkup, he said that he did not know if he would be taken for it.

The family explained that Mushaima wasn't able to talk about the situation inside the prison and how the prison's administration treats prisoners as the call suddenly was ended.

The family confirmed that calls are usually cut immediately after they ask about the situation in Jau prison. They believe that the prison administration does not want the truth about what happened inside the prison to come out to the public.
