Hope to see you there.

There is online worship from our sister church at Emmanuel, Cardigan Road, Bridlington every Sunday, live on Facebook or in person at 11.00 am, or later in the day on our YouTube channel.

From the vicar, Richard Hare

Every year we have a fortnight's holiday in the Lake District, staying in a flat or a cottage in Keswick. It's a great base for walks in the fells, as well as offering plenty of teashops for the (frequent) wet-weather days. This year we'll be joined by new granddaughter Annabeth and her parents, and our other daughter for a few days too. It will be delightful and rather different, having a baby in the house.

Psalm 121 in the Bible begins, "I lift up my eyes to the hills – where does my help come from?", and it's a line that sometimes comes to mind when hiking in the midst of that glorious scenery. Surely the Psalmist is reflecting on how immovable and serene the hills are, we might think. Not a bit of it. For the ancient Israelites, the hills were where enemy invaders came from. They would scan the mountains with anxiety, not peaceful contemplation. So the second line makes sense: 'My help comes from the Lord, the Maker of heaven and earth.'

You and I are unlikely to be glancing up at the Wolds worrying about hostile attack. But we are likely to fear harm from other sources – a cancer diagnosis, perhaps, a drained bank balance, or fall-out with a neighbour. If so, we could do worse than taking heart from the reassuring words in the rest of the Psalm, not least its final verses:

"The Lord will keep you from all harm – he will watch over your life.
The Lord will watch over you

Hutton Cranswick 137 for 5 from 18 overs
Barmston 188 for 7 from 18 overs

After a good start with their batting, Hutton Cranswick were restricted to 137 with Alex Shipley and Ashley Porter each taking 2 of the 5 wickets that fell by the end of their 18 overs. Barmston 109 all out from 18 overs

Despite 5 Barmston players managing run rates of 100% and over and Dan Artley taking 3 of Wetwang's wickets, it was not enough to secure this match.

TICKET EXCUSE

A man was driving home late one afternoon above the speed limit when he spied the flashing lights of a police car in his rear view mirror. He thinks “I can outrun this guy” and so the chase began – 60, 70, 80, 90 miles per hour but as he reached 100mph he realised he was not going to be able to outrun the police car and so pulled over to the curb.

The police officer gets out of his car and going over to the driver, leans down and says “listen sir, I have had a really awful day and I just want to go home. Give me a good excuse why you were speeding and I’ll let you go”

The driver thought for a moment and said “Three weeks ago my wife ran off with a police officer. When I saw your car in my rear view mirror, I thought you were that officer and you were trying to give her back to me”!!

HISTORY PAGE

FRAISTHORPE

Fraisthorpe was recorded in the Domesday Book of 1085 as being part of the Hunthow Hundred. A Hundred was a sub division of a Shire or county as we now call them. When the measurement of an area was introduced by the Saxons between 613 and 1017, a Hundred represented enough land to sustain approximately 100 households.

The Hunthow Hundred reached from Reighton in the north down to Fraisthorpe in the south and inland as far as Grindale and Boynton. There were 20 places listed in Hunthow at that time. Fraithope was listed as having 3 occupants:

- Count Robert of Mortain – the land was likely to have been waste when acquired in 1066
- Hugh, son of Baldric – again, probably waste when acquired in 1066
- Uhtred – in 1086 the annual value of the land was listed as 5 shillings

Mortain's estate was thought to have been held by Richard de Surdeval and then by the Palnels. Uhtred's estate later belonged to the Tattershalls.

By the mid 12th century, the resident lord of the manor of Fraisthorpe was Erenburg of Burton and it was around this time that the first chapel was built. Tithes then belonged to Bridlington Priory together with those of Auburn.

We move on now to 1530 when William Strickland was born. His voyages to the New World gained him the title of William Strickland the Navigator. He amassed considerable funds from his travels and in 1549 he bought the manor of Boynton which included the lands at Fraisthorpe. William was credited with introducing the turkey into England on his return from one of the early voyages of exploration to the Americas. In 1550 he was granted a coat of arms that included a turkey. The College of Arms record of this coat of arms is said to be the oldest surviving European drawing of a turkey. An illustration of his coat of arms was on display on the wall of the church at Fraisthorpe .

In 1823 Fraisthorpe was written as "Fraysthorpe". It was in the parish of Carnaby and there were two farmers among the occupants of the village. In 1866 it became a separate parish.

In 1870-72, it was reported that Fraisthorpe had a population of 85 with 11 houses. It covered an area of 2,153 acres, 11 of which were under water. By 1891 the population had grown to 95. In 1892, the then virtually derelict church was restored as a memorial to Mary Wilson, the daughter of a former rector of Fraisthorpe - more of that another day. 1 April 1896 the parish was abolished to form Fraisthorpe with Auburn and Wilsthorpe and in 1935, Fraisthorpe was finally united with Barmston to form the parish of Barmston and Fraisthorpe – the status that remains to this day.

The Strickland family continued to own the Boynton estate until the death of Sir Walter Strickland, the 9th Baronet, in 1938. This ended the direct line of descendants from William and the estate then passed to the Strickland-Constable branch of the family.

The village continued on its quiet agricultural way until the First World War and the advent of the Dawson-Hydes at one of the larger farms. There were many tramps around and the Dawson-Hydes were noted for never turning one away. One tramp was of Turkish origin, without legs. He travelled very ably by use of his arms and stumps protected by leather patches. It was said that he was frightened by nobody, even though disabled. Any trouble and out would come his First World War revolver!

During this period the local blacksmith and joiner were kept very busy. However, as 1939 approached the coastline was heavily fortified to prevent invasion, the cliffs being very shallow. The fields and woods around Fraisthorpe were congested with tanks, ambulances and other vehicles, and staff waiting to be shipped out of Hull to the continent.

Up to then no property had running water or electricity and, ironically, when the war began large numbers of Italian prisoners of war were housed in the village in Nissan huts and they were the first ones to gain these advantages. The highest property on the village outskirts, a three storey house, had to be demolished because it was in direct line of heavy artillery firing out to sea. There were two aircraft shot down and quite a number of land mines and incendiary devices dropped in the area.

After the war the village returned to its own quiet way until more and more people came on their holidays. In the early 1950s Fraisthorpe was very popular with travelling gipsies and it became unusual not to see their caravans around the village.

The Boynton estate was finally sold in the 1950's with Fraisthorpe being eventually sold off to private ownership in the 1960's..

In 1960, The Elim Pentecostal Church Summer Camp set up started on fields along the cliff top - an event that continued every year until 2009 when it moved to an inland site.

Fraisthorpe beach had been popular with naturists for a number of years and in 1980 an area of the beach was officially designated as a naturist area by the then North Wolds Borough Council in what was deemed a progressive move. However, after many reports of unacceptable behaviour, in the late 1990's, the council rescinded the designation. Problems have continued on and off to this day over this issue.

Nowadays there are no amenities in the village but In the past there was a small village shop, a blacksmith and a joinery shop, and on the outskirts a sand and gravel quarry known as Kingsgate gravel pit. It was opened for the purpose of supplying sand and gravel for the building of Carnaby airfield before the Second World War.
