

Biocyclic vegan farming – an opportunity for the organic food sector

Why the organic sector is still reluctant to embrace a vegan concept, whereas most vegan products come from conventional production (which is not really ecologically sustainable).

And why, through biocyclic vegan agriculture, the organic sector has the opportunity to set new standards for the entire food industry.

These questions are addressed in an article in the Vegconomist:

vegconomist
- the vegan business magazine -

[02.02.2024]

Op Ed: Axel Anders, Co-Founder, Biocyclic Vegan International, Says Vegan Products Are Not Equally Sustainable

The market for vegan products is booming. Young people, in particular, are increasingly opting for a responsible, plant-based lifestyle for reasons of sustainability and animal ethics. An absolutely positive development!

However, it is worth taking a closer look to realise that vegan products are not equally sustainable. The focus is often on avoiding animal ingredients, while other ecological aspects play a secondary role ...

Continue reading:

<https://vegconomist.com/opinion/op-ed-axel-anders-biocyclic-vegan-products-not-equally-sustainable/>

Please visit us at Biofach (Hall 9, Booth 116)

www.biocyclic-vegan.org