What is a cookie?

A cookie is a small file of letters and numbers sent to your computer when you consult the website. Cookies generally make interaction between the visitor and the website easier and faster.

What cookies exist and what is their purpose?

"Essential cookies"

Essential cookies are necessary so that visitors can use all functions of the website correctly. Without essential cookies, the website will not work correctly.

"Functional cookies"

Functional cookies are used to remember visitor information on the website such as language, for example.

"Analytical cookies"

Analytical cookies help us understand how visitors interact with the website, detect errors and perform better overall analysis.

"Marketing cookies"

Marketing cookies are third-party cookies used to track visitors when they visit different websites. Their purpose is to display ads tailored and relevant to the individual user. These ads thus become more valuable to publishers and third-party advertisers.

Management of cookies

Managing cookies via your browser:

If you want to avoid certain cookies being installed on your computer, you can indicate this through your browser's privacy settings. Deleting cookies can also be done via your browser's privacy settings.

Managing cookies via the website and cookie information banner:

As a user, you can decide whether you want to accept only essential cookies or also other cookies (such as marketing cookies, etc.). You do this by clicking on 1 of the 2 buttons at the bottom of the website in the cookie banner:

"Accept all": if you as a user click this button, you give your permission to activate both essential cookies and all other types of cookies during your visit(s) to the website.

"Customise": if you as a user click this button, you will see a list of all types of cookies used. You can then check or uncheck which cookies you wish to accept or not for each category. The essential cookies, which are necessary to use the website during your visit(s), are automatically accepted. You then confirm your choice via the "Save my preferences" button.
