Undocumented people face many challenges in accessing basic and human rights in European cities. As undocumented people are excluded from public resources, cities have to deal with the accompanying consequences where national governments can turn a blind eye. The power of making changes locally calls for a union of cities and their organisations.

The active participation of undocumented citizens in decision-making and public life is at the core of City Rights United. The participation of marginalised groups stimulates civic democracy in Europe and improves their situation in Europe.

Since 2019, City Rights United, a network of grassroots, migrant-led and cultural institutional organisations have collaborated to co-create a Toolkit for Inclusive Cities: a collection of innovative and creative practices and ideas to make cities more inclusive for undocumented people.

The toolkit is a collective effort by a coalition of people with and without documents from all over Europe by exchanging experiences struggles and solutions. They have come together both online and during in-person conferences in Amsterdam, Utrecht, Hamburg and Naples. The knowledge shared is now combined in the Toolkit for Inclusive Cities.
