Imagine a normal day on our planet begins. Everybody is doing whatever they are able to and want to do. Some minutes and hours of every day we spent for personal life issues, like sleeping, drinking, eating, breathing, cleaning, cooking, family, children, health, sport, art, nature and so on. These are all common basic tasks and needs for keeping us happy and healthy to be capable as living social entity. Other minutes and hours of the day are usually called work, studies, duties, school or business. That time during each day we produce something or doing something for other humans. So why are we not getting this time of the day back from other humans with other qualifications instead of earning money?

As many would probably directly answer, because it is needed to buy, rent, lease or exchange goods. Maybe in this very moment it is still true, that you could receive a good by giving a certain amount of notes to the person with a skill or a product. But if you try to create a vision where everyone of our fellow humans around would exchange their time without any notes in between. How would professional interactions of humans on our planet be organized correctly?

Even if all humans would receive unconditionally, for example 120 hours per months gratis to “buy” anything. Would we still need to transfer any numbers beside of hours and minutes from our work?

Healthcare, education, water, food and energy could be guaranteed through a free average equal global unconditional basic time income for everybody with a CO<sup>2</sup> Footprint on each transparently, fair traded good or material.

So how could this tool look like and how would it function, to make all these Utopian facts come easily true in the nearby future?

First of all, nearly all adults know already where we mostly work, and what we are willing to contribute into our community around. Lets see this qualifications, passions, hobbies, talent as “our giving energy” connected with a place or a region. This is the most important connection to start with. Now imagine an open source map where everybody is able to enter the personal information about their professional “giving energy” together with a pin of his region or city where they are, like in the newspapers the job-market. This map will now be filled from everyone with these details including working or opening hours, location and a link to a personal or business website.

Some of these pins are moving when somebody is changing the location of their office or some of these pins changing the color because somebody changed the field of occupation. Perhaps a couple of new pins are created from only one person who has different qualifications, in various places, at changing schedules.

Finally in this map you could even find daily buttons where all public decisions of you home town or region are open to vote for projects instead of representatives. This would be a transparent working, self-trading, self-advertising, self-publishing, sharing and caring symbiotic synergy solution network, where everybody could decide what kind of work to offer. At the same time we would all receive and give real life time, minutes and hours around each other, instead of notes. Only humans all together can transform our current economy into a Open Life Network within time. We have to start little, because from little things, big things grow. Everything has to start at home. To educate our children it needs at least the whole neighborhood, the district of the city or even all cultures of our planet. We are now with the global networking possibilities at the edge of digital natives to the next step towards a new species in real life as well offline, what we could call “Homo Universalis Mundialis”. We create the ground with that tool for open, transparent and sustainable solutions. In the meanwhile, everything what was only shortly described as DOCUTOPIA is perhaps already tomorrow global reality. We will be the ones who are able to use this tool wisely, as role model for the next generation to hand it over to.

Our only planet earth is giving us the last chance to make a peaceful step in evolution for the better of all together. Let's seed, water and feed the #OpenRealLifeSynergySolutionNetwork...
