

The buildings towards west and north contains all the barns for grain and threshing floor .

While the living house and the rest of the southern building up to the gate passage seems to be build the same time of new materials, the western part seems to be build from used parts - may be from earlier buildings on the farm and from before it was build together to a whole with the barn in north forming the now existing "hook".

Youngest is the barn i north. With its three square high timber framed walls and fine curved slanting posts it could be dated to 1800.

From ruin to unique attraction

Jollmands Farm on the beautiful Northern Als is an outstanding example on an Alsisk "hook- shaped" Farm, build in the 1800-century.

As The Farm was nearby falling apart, a group of local idealists in 2002 decided to save the old, but ramshackle buildings. The Farm now is an unique representative of a characteristic local building tradition and older Alsiian agriculture.

The history of the Farm

The history of the Farm can be traced back as far as to the 13. century, where archaeological excavations showed signs after a longhouse in exactly the same place at the now standing house.

The buildings of today can be dated to the end of 1700. The Farm includes more connected units: - living house, stable, feed floor, horse stable, gate passage, foal stable, grain barns, threshing floor and wagon gate.

The living house at east is the oldest part and shows an Alsiian living tradition as known from the 15. century up to the beginning of 1900. The kitchen has an early type of "cooker" on witch you make fire underneath the pots through a special fire opening. From the fireplace in the kitchen, you also heat in the iron stove in the living room (dørns). Behind the kitchen is a pantry as well as a small room, where milk and ale was kept. In the living room there are three alcoves.

The great chamber in east is the hall (piselen) - the finest living room, where feasts and ceremonies could take place.

Between the living house and the stable is the scullery. The big fireplace her contains a baking oven, boiling kettle, a fire bench and a firing opening for the malt drying in the loft.

After the scullery comes the stable. The paving stone in the stable is conserved and quit intact. Between tables for cows and horses is the feed floor. In the hors stable there have been place for 6 horses and foal, and in the north western corner is a room for the harness and with an double alcove for the farm men.
