STORA SALEN	Round Table The Swedish Transport Administration, Trafikverket Architecture as a Tool for Sustainability The Swedish Transport Administration's architectural goal is to contribute to societal development by creating well-designed environments that are functional, sustainable and beautiful. But how can architecture contribute to the United Nations' Agenda 2030? How can architectural solutions systematically effectuate sustainability goals related to climate impact, biodiversity, health, natural and cultural values, cities and communities? Following an overview of the governing sustainability goals from an architectural perspective, practical approaches are presented for how architecture allows ambitions for sustainability to reach further.	16:25 Oral Presentation by Martin Brattström and NOLA, Swedish main sponsor Three-dimensional greenery - The possibility of using climbing plants as an alternative to trees in urban environments. <hr/> 16:45 Carla Ruttimann, landscape architect, founding partner of Rencoret and Ruttimann Arquitectura y Paisaje. Oral Presentation by the IFLA award winners at the Barcelona Landscaping Biennial 2021: Resreva Elemental Likades
BIRKA	Round Table Double-duty actions for health and well-being through climate city planning Significant measures are taken to accelerate climate transition with the goal of reducing emissions. We argue it is essential that such actions equally drive social sustainability by aligning climate actions with interventions for improved health, well-being, as well as social inclusion. As a built artifact, we argue that the city represents an important instrument for such double-duty actions.	Round Table Injustice and landscape care: inquiry on displacement in Mediterranean landscapes Maria Gabriella Trovato, Landscape Architects Without Borders Panel: Julie Weltzien - the German international development cooperation, Burcu Yigit Turan, SLU, Alexander Shevchenko founder of Zvidsy Agency and ReStart Ukraine project. Everyday crises characterise several communities in countries where layers of global political imbalance have framed injustice, vulnerability, socio-economic disparities, and conflicts. Disasters and conflicts disrupt life, degrade environmental equilibrium, and drive/force new development. Scholars are looking for new

	The session includes an introduction followed by a reflecting discussion on the possibilities and potential of transforming cities to promote climate and health in harmony. The multidisciplinary team of researchers and practitioners of the Stockholm use case: Karolinska Institutet: Professor of Exercise Physiology Carl Johan Sundberg and Professor of Global Transformation for Health Stefan Swartling Peterson KTH Royal Institute of Technology: Professor in Applied Urban Design Ann Legeby. Sweco Sverige: Dr Charlie Gullström, Architect/PhD, Research and Innovation Strategist; Landscape architects Fredrik Toller and Daniel Gulliksson	approaches to emergencies that move behind the business as usual and respond to complexities and contradictions of urban, rural, marine and forested contexts. How to contribute to socio-environmental equity through landscape actions/research that responds to pressing emergencies with an increased understanding of the landscape’s critical role and responsibility in constructing the future of our territories? The International Federation of Landscape Architects states that landscape architects are tasked with creating ‘globally sustainable and balanced living environments for the benefit of humanity worldwide’ (IFLAWorld, 2023). Indeed, landscape architects are trained to have an integrated understanding of environmental factors, political forces and cultural traditions that shape the land and generate responses to several forms of conflicts. There is a need to reconsider the way of living on this planet in the context of demographic growth and human-induced environmental changes. Scholars and intellectuals share the idea that there is a fundamental right to landscapes, considered a right to healthy and culturally rich environments that everyone is entitled to demand. Landscape Architects can be the game-changers in the recovery and reconstruction of the planet’s ecological systems and contribute to how we inhabit, produce, and navigate our landscapes. This panel aims to define liminal paths between humanitarian design, the right to shared landscapes and the well-being of communities, and the governance of the recovery and reconstruction process. It aligns with the commitment of the LAWB - IFLA working group Landscape Architects Without Borders. LAWB is engaged in working with vulnerable and disadvantaged communities, especially those affected by war, conflict, and natural disasters, helping them re-create safe, sustainable and dignified living conditions.
