The concept of the "Russian World" has been a focal point of academic interest both for Russians, seeking to highlight the common identity of Russian culture across the different nations which formerly comprised the Soviet Union and for academics and students in the west. The genealogy and teleology of the concept is complex and needs to be approached from a wide perspective, surveying the concept from its earliest traces to its use by the Russian émigré intelligentsia looking to forge a new cultural identity to embrace people from a variety of nations and cultures.

On December 15th Sankt Ignatios will hold a workshop examining the historical background and social setting of Ruskiy Mir, as well as its present use in the context of the ongoing war.
