CEFALÙ

Cefalù is a medieval town on the northern coast of Sicily, about 60 km east of Palermo. It was built on the site of an ancient Greek settlement. Remains of the old megalithic boundaries and of the most ancient part of the inhabited area can be seen on the picturesque mountain rising on the back of the town.

Cefalù has a long, sandy beach, which you can freely attend if you want to go bathing. It is especially suited for children. Walking along its pedestrian main road and down the nice side streets, you'll find plenty of delightful restaurants, cafés and shops.

The most important monument of Cefalù is the Cathedral, an amazing building in southern Romanesque style built by King Roger II, featuring beautiful golden mosaics. Also worth seeing are the medieval washing place, the ancient Osterio magno palace and the Mandralisca museum: here there is a picture gallery with, among others, a fine painting by Antonello da Messina - Portrait of an unknown man - as well as an archaeological and a numismatic collection.
