to be considered as a single entity. The first to be considered is the Principia Mathematica of Bertrand Russell and Alfred North Whitehead. This work, which was published in 1910, is a massive attempt to derive all of mathematics from logic. The book is divided into three parts: "The Logic of Relations," "Abstract Entities," and "Cardinal and Ordinal Numbers." The first part deals with the basic concepts of logic, such as propositional calculus and predicate logic. The second part deals with abstract entities, such as sets and functions. The third part deals with cardinal and ordinal numbers, which are used to measure the size of sets. The book is highly technical and requires a strong background in logic and mathematics. It is considered a classic work in the field of mathematical logic.
